Web Site Provides Custom Alibis

Pretexts Offered For Business, Social, Personal Needs

DENVER -- There's a new Web site offering a unique service: made-to-order alibis for any occasion.

The Alibi Network was launched by two men in Chicago and it already has over 1,600 clients.

The service costs $35 a year and clients can order customized alibis ranging from sick calls to covers for extra-marital affairs.

The Web site claims to be able to provide calls from all over the world, including major hotels, to add to anyone's ruse.

The support staff of the site operates in four countries and can provide custom-made alibis for anything, the site claims.

The service also includes "rescue calls" to get you out of any engagement.

The company claims it can cover for someone on a job interview, supply a convincing sick day pretext or facilitate secret delivery of treatment for an embarrassing medical condition.

"We put you in control and let you choose between local and out of town alibis with the option to have alibis validated by live operators," the Web site says.
